CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Irrespective of what action the State Board of Pardons takes concerning the present case of the four murderers asking for clemency, the Appeal is of the same mind that hanging for crime is not a punishment fit for the present time and condition of affairs and men. The fact that other states have taken this matter up and have done away with capital punishment gives this state a chance to follow in the line of progress. It has been found in the States that have taken this mode that crime does not increase, but on the contrary that a life sentence works a greater punishment on the criminal than that of putting him out of the way by the hanging route.

The spiritual condition of condemned men does not play any part with the writer, on the contrary the paper does not can an imprecation about the spiritual condition of any brute who calmly plans and commits murder. As a class the murderer is of a disposition that dislikes work. Work is the bane he fights shy of. His entire energy is given over to gain a livelihood without manual labor and in his seeking for this end it is murder for the revenue of it. This is practically the case with the men now under consideration. Two of them have more than a fair education, good trades, and are able to make a living without resorting to crime.

The general cry is "What shall we do with the murderers and felons?" Put them to work, make them work the rest of their natural lives. Place implements of hard toil in their hands and compel them to labor for the community they have wronged. If there is any one thing that is punishment to the ordinary criminal it is work and the fact that they murder for the spoils of the victim is sufficient to show that work and plenty of it would be a greater penalty as punishment than all of the hangmen who ever swung a man from the gallows.

At the Nevada prison there is a stone quarry that could employ a hundred men. There are unbuilt roads in every direction. The State is in constant need of stone buildings. The prison needs many improvements and the fellow prisoners would be provided for by their kind. Work is what the State can provide instead of the hangman's noose and the result is that the felon and murderer is a benefit in a measure to the peace loving citizen who foots the bills of the criminal element.

Five thousand claims have been located in the Goldfield mining district. About one-half this number have been surveyed and patents have been applied for on about 500.
